

HEAVY FOG HALTS THIRD OF SERIES FOR YACHT CUP

Generally Unfavorable Weather Compels Committee To Postpone Event

WON EASILY YESTERDAY

Shamrocks Will Pass From Seas With Losing of The Present Contest

ABOARD U. S. S. KANE, OFF NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 16.—The third of the international yacht races between the defender Enterprise and the challenger Shamrock V was officially called off today on account of the heavy fog and generally unfavorable weather.

The race committee instructed all boats at the starting line to return to port. The fog was so dense that two large yachts collided in the Harbor but were only slightly damaged.

The race committee conferred through the morning and finally decided that the low visibility and lack of wind precluded any contest today. The visibility on the ocean course was limited to a little more than a mile.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 16.—Solemnly, with the graven mien so characteristic of this most humorless of sports, international yacht racing was ready again this morning for a resumption of the empty ceremonial of a challenge that obviously is out-classed in all save gallantry and honor. The occasion was to be the third race of the series between Enterprise, American defender, and Shamrock V, twice defeated invader from England. According to those whose authority to speak cannot be questioned, it also was to mark the beginning of the end of the series itself, at least insofar as America and England were concerned. The latter, it seems, will not challenge again for a matter of many years and perhaps never. It has had enough of the affair, at least under the rules and conditions now in effect.

The last of the Shamrocks, an object for commiseration yesterday as it finished all of a mile and a quarter astern for the worst beating any Shamrock has any taken in this event will try again today and, failing then, will make its fourth and final gesture tomorrow or on Thursday. After that, it will be free of this distressing obligation and so will its owner, the perennial Sir Thomas Lipton. For him, too, it will be the end.

His Shamrocks are to pass from the seas they have graced with 31 years of fruitless challenging. Their passing will break the succession of British endeavor in the cup series, dating back to 1851. Few in England have the money that is necessary to sponsor a cup challenger and even fewer the desire to prolong a series which they believe to be a forlorn cause under current regulations. These they feel, may not be actually unfair to the challenger but are at least inimical to its best interests.

Whatever the cause, the result was two obviously one-sided races on Saturday and yesterday and unless racing luck runs very strongly with the challenger, this ought to be pretty much the outcome of today's program. This was to follow the pattern of Saturday's premiere of the windward-and-leeward course, with an ever decreasing convoy of ocean craft in the background. The latter numbered many hundreds on Saturday and will be down in the dozens, if the series lasts long enough. It is interesting to note that by what transpired over the week-end.

This proved that the Shamrock had neither the speed nor the equipment of the defender and the fact that regulations call for the boats to prove this all over again every day until one of them has won four times naturally doesn't excite the populace unduly. They feel, too, that there must be something very inequitable about a code that requires the challenger to be named so far in advance that nobody knows what it can do in a race, while the defender is named only after it has proved its quality.

At that, the Shamrock has had only moderate seas and light airs for these races, so the fact that this morning showed a very "dirty" sky line might mean something very significant or nothing at all.

English Pianist To Teach at Yale

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 4.—Harold Samuel, famous English pianist, is to be attached to the Yale University school of music in September and October, according to announcement by University officials, to conduct a class devoted exclusively to the study of Bach. Only twelve members will make up the class.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Halpin and sons, William and Daniel, and daughter, Ida, of 318 Hayes street, were Sunday guests of Mr. Halpin's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. P. T. Halpin, of Mount Holly.

Annual Chicken Dinner To Be Given at Langhorne

LANGHORNE, Sept. 16.—The Langhorne Fire Company will give the fifth annual chicken supper, on Thursday evening, September 18th, in the Bucks County Country Club here. The committee in charge of the affair has made arrangements to have guests served from five to eight o'clock. About 800 guests are expected to be present.

There will be dancing in the main ball room of the country club after dinner is served. As this is one of the chief sources of revenue to the fire company every one is invited to make the affair a success.

Over Two Million Unemployed In England

LONDON, Sept. 16.—For the first time since the great trade slump of 1921-22, the number of unemployed in Great Britain has exceeded 2,000,000. This enormous figure of workless threatens to cause the downfall of the Labor Government during the next session of Parliament which begins on October 28th.

One of the election promises of the Labor Party at the last General Election was to solve the unemployment problem.

Premier Ramsay MacDonald defends his Government by declaring that the present state of affairs is not due to bad management of affairs in England but to world-wide trade depression. He asserts that the only way England can be saved from industrial ruin is for the people to go back to tilling the soil.

DOYLESTOWN FAIR READY TO OPEN

Tuesday Will Mark First Day of Big Annual Event

THE FINEST EXHIBIT YET

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 16.—Everything is ready to fire the "opening gun" that will usher in the eighth annual Doylestown Fair the week beginning September 23. The picture is all set for the biggest and best five day and night exhibition ever planned by the Doylestown Fair directors and associates.

The reputation of being "one of the finest agricultural exhibits in the United States," will be defended again this year in no uncertain manner, according to reports made last night at a meeting of the directors and department heads.

According to Dr. H. W. Turner, of New Hope, state veterinarian, who is the very active president of the Doylestown Fair, and J. Allen Gardy, secretary, entries are up to par this year. Grange competition has increased this year for the first time. At least five granges will compete for the farm products awards.

Surpassing all expectation, the entries for the fall show of the Philadelphia Rabbit and Cavy Breeders' Association held in conjunction with the fair this year instead of being held in Madison Square Garden, have reached a total of 510 rabbits and 200 guinea pigs. Most of the entries are from small exhibitors so that it will really be a "big show" in every detail. The first annual banquet of the Philadelphia Rabbit and Cavy Breeders' Association will be held on the fair grounds on Tuesday night, Sept. 23, at 8 o'clock, with rabbit meat as the chief course. The dinner will be served by the Friendship Thimble Social.

Another announcement made last night was that former governor, Gifford Pinchot, candidate for Governor this year, will be a guest at the Doylestown Fair on Thursday of fair week, Sept. 25. The gubernatorial candidate of the Republicans of Pennsylvania will arrive in Doylestown at 4 o'clock from Allentown. He will speak from the grandstand at 5 o'clock on the local fair grounds.

Another move for the advance of the interest of the fair this year is the complete ban that has been placed on the racketeering by concessionaires. The arm of the law will be put into use the minute that shady games put in an appearance.

"Rube" J. Weckerly, of Philadelphia, secretary of the speed department, announced yesterday that "a good bunch of race horses have been entered." The entries close Thursday, Sept. 18. Over $5,000 in purse money will be given to the winners this year. Last year eighty-nine horses started at the fair and seventy-nine won money. There will be racing every day of fair week.

The infield exhibition track for the horse show has been completed. This will make it possible to show horses every day. So attractive has been this new improvement to owners and exhibitors that the largest entry list for the horse show in the history of the fair has been the result. J. Stanley Lee, of Newtown, head of the department announces that the most prominent owners in the East will be entered in the show.

World War veterans who plan to stage the biggest military pageant ever attempted in Bucks county, report that at least ten American Legionnaires will be present.

DEATH CUTS SHORT CAREER OF FILM STAR

Milton Sills, Widely Known Screen Actor, Dies of Heart Attack

WAS PLAYING TENNIS

SANTA MONICA, Cal., Sept. 16.—(INS)—Death today had cut short the career of Milton Sills, widely known stage and motion picture actor.

Sills, for years noted for his realistic portrayal of virile types, succumbed to a heart attack on the tennis court of his home in Brentwood Heights late yesterday.

Shortly after 5 o'clock, the actor, accompanied by his wife, Doris Kenyon, herself a featured film player, and his daughter, Dorothy, had gone to the court for a few sets of tennis. It was to have been not so much a game as it was a constitutional for Sills. He was convalescing from a nervous and physical breakdown.

After the game had progressed for about thirty minutes Sills slumped slowly to the ground without a word. Servants carried him into the house and physicians were summoned. The famous actor was dead when they arrived.

Sills had not regained consciousness after his collapse.

Square-jawed, six feet 1½ inches in height with level gray eyes and brown hair, Sills had become somewhat of an international idol through his heroic characterizations on the screen. He was known as a leader both on and off the screen. For years he had taken a leading part in various movie films. At various times he acted as the spokesman for the industry.

Filmdom first drew Sills in 1914. At the time, he was appearing on the legitimate stage after abandoning a promising academic career as a graduate student, instructor and fellow in philosophy at the University of Chicago.

His theatrical career saw Sills rise to leading roles on Broadway twenty years ago.

About one year ago Sills' health broke and he retired to a sanatorium in the East where he remained for nine months and then returned to Hollywood to resume his career.

Miss Kenyon was Sills' second wife. He was married the first time in 1910 to Gladys Wynne, of London, Eng. They were divorced and in 1926 he was married to Miss Kenyon.

GERMAN DEMOCRACY WARS WITH THE ADHERENTS OF SOCIALISM, SAYS WRITER

German Democracy and German Socialism in Their Present Forms Are Joint Products of War and Revolution — In Popular Consciousness They Go Together — Extreme Socialists Would Throw Democracy Overboard.

(This is the fourth and last article of the series by the Berlin correspondent of the International News Service depicting the difficulties of Central European democracy.)

By Otto D. Tolischus
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

BERLIN, Sept. 16.—German democracy and German Socialism, at least in their present form, are joint products of war and revolution.

They need not go together, but in popular consciousness they do. The problem of Socialism is therefore the central problem of German democracy as well. Socialists are Democrats and the Democrats acknowledge the need of a considerable amount of Socialism.

The Social-Democrats argue: political democracy entails as a necessary development of economic democracy, and the perfection of economic democracy, is Socialism.

The anti-Socialists argue that it is nothing of the kind. They point to America as a democracy without Socialism and to Russia as Socialism without democracy.

The extreme anti-Socialists would therefore throw democracy overboard in order to abolish Socialism. They are the adherents of a dictatorship of the right—foremost among them the German Nationalists led by Alfred Hugenberg.

The extreme Socialists would throw democracy overboard in order to attain complete Socialism. They are the adherents of a dictatorship of the left—first of all the Communists, who see Bolshevik Russia as their ideal.

Between the would-be dictators of the right and the would-be dictators of the left, completing the circle, stand the National Socialists. They are for a nationalistic Socialism or for a socialistic Nationalism, but above everything else they are for a dictatorship on any terms. They are supported by some industrial circles on the theory that they form a bulwark against Socialists and Communists and that their Socialism is largely window-dressing to attract the labor vote. But nobody can say with certainty today whether their rapidly growing ranks will eventually march to the right or to the left, whether their nationalism or their Socialism will dominate in the end. The probable development will be the typically German one: they'll split.

This leaves a conglomeration of some dozen different parties in the center now represented in the cabinet who would preserve a non-Socialistic democracy, or at least the elements of it. Under pressure of the economic crisis they have formed a working arrangement on the basis of the present republican constitution for carrying out the "Hindenburg program," namely to push back what they consider the excesses of Socialism and to aid German business recovery. Significantly enough, they too plan to do this by additional huge subsidies to industry and agriculture, and by lowering prices and wages in order to force German exports into the world markets.

But they seem destined to remain in the minority. Their chances of obtaining a parliamentary majority are slim and unless they want to abandon their program, the continuation of the present "dictatorship" is their only way out. Parliamentary government in Germany, already compromised by many failures and especially by the luckless handling of the financial situation by Chancellor Brüning, would thereby get another blow and it is a question whether the patient could recuperate.

It has been said by German and (Continued on Page 4)

Mrs. Warrington, who resides at 442 West Bridge street, Morrisville, returned home recently on the S. S. President Roosevelt after having made a month's pilgrimage to France where she visited the grave of her foster son, William McClain, at the Meuse Argonne Cemetery. McClain had lived with Mrs. Warrington since he was a boy of 8 years. He served as a private in the Army and had seen service overseas three months when he was killed.

The Morrisville woman was one of 170 Gold Star mothers who made their headquarters in Paris. She stopped at Verdun four days. Each mother was given a wreath by the U. S. government to place on the grave of her son. The mothers were entertained at the hostess house at the cemetery and were personally conducted on their trip to the grounds and other places of interest by a major of the U. S. Army. Ambassador Edge greeted the mothers in a talk at the grave of the Unknown Soldier. As the ship carrying the mothers docked, a group of Army planes, forming a cross, accompanied it up the harbor.

Mrs. Warrington was loud in her praise of the courtesies extended by the U. S. government during the trip.

In spite of the inclemency of the weather, Saturday, about eighty descendants of the late Benjamin and Hannah Cadwallader assembled at "Kennel Farm," the home of Mr. and Mrs. Washington Cadwallader, near Warrington, for their 21st annual reunion.

The event was marked by an interesting program, the report of the historian, picnic dinner which had to be served under cover because of the rain, and an interesting program of sports.

A small safe was taken from a chain store in Chalfont early Saturday morning, and the thieves obtained loot amounting to about $50 after hauling it about twelve miles, to a lonely spot near Quakertown, and forcing the door.

The safe was found later Saturday morning with the door broken, the cash missing, and several endorsed checks scattered about the road.

The annual meeting of the combined auxiliaries of Grand View Hospital, Sellersville, was held on Saturday afternoon in the large hall at Perkaskie Park, Perkaskie, due to the inclemency of the weather. More than a hundred people were present.

Auxiliaries were represented from Sellersville, Perkaskie, Souderton, Telford, Silverdale, Richlandtown, and other towns in the area which the hospital serves.

The event was in the form of a dinner, at which 108 people were served. When rain made the plans for an outdoor dinner impossible, an abrupt change was made on Saturday morning, and the event carried off in the large hall.

The principal speaker of the afternoon's program was Rev. H. E. Fassnacht, pastor of the First Evangelical Church, of Perkaskie.

The only one who should put faith in the rabbit's foot is a rabbit.

LIQUOR OFFERS ARE ENEMY ADVANCES, SAYS JUDGE BOYER

Judge Boyer Warns Against Taking Drinks That Are Offered

FOX ON PROBATION

Trial of Alleged Bootleg Kerosene Case is Now Before The Court

Disposition of Cases

Arthur E. Fox, Doylestown: Charge, operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor; pleaded guilty; sentence of one year suspended and the defendant put on probation; costs placed on defendant.

Jacob Millen, Hilltown township: Charge, possessing intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes; pleaded guilty; fined $250 and costs.

Wilmer Amey, Hellertown: Charge, uttering a worthless check; case dismissed on the grounds of want of jurisdiction.

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 16.—Charged with bootlegging kerosene in violation of the liquid fuel act of Pennsylvania, three Philadelphians, John L. Patterson, Thomas H. Haines and Charles Zimmerman, went on trial before Judge Hiram H. Keller in No. 1 Court.

The Commonwealth charges that the defendants put kerosene into a Pennsylvania Valvoline Oil Company's tank in front of the store of Harvey Mathias at Penn's Park on July 9, this year. It is charged the kerosene, represented to be Lenox valvoline kerosene, was a bootleg fuel and not as represented.

Mathias testified that Patterson and Zimmerman came to his store on July 9 and sold him 130 gallons of kerosene for which he gave them a check made out to Thomas H. Haines for $15.60, or 12 cents a gallon. One of the endorsements on the check offered in evidence was "The Ace Oil Company."

Mathias testified that he learned that the oil placed in the Valvoline Company's tank was not Valvoline oil. The prosecuting attorney, John L. Dubois, Doylestown, announced this trial to be a test case.

Under cross-examination, Mathias testified that his tank had some other kerosene in it, when the defendants put their fuel in the tank.

"Treat every man that offers you a drink as your enemy," Judge Calvin S. Boyer told Arthur E. Fox, Doylestown, during a severe admonishment in courtroom No. 2.

Fox, charged with operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, pleaded guilty.

It was brought out by the prosecutor, Paul Reiker, Bensalem township, that when he was about to turn into a driveway while driving on Church street, Doylestown, on June 25, the front of his automobile was struck by a machine operated by the defendant, Reiker alleged on the stand that Fox refused to pay for the damages to his car.

Fox did not go on the stand, but admitted to the Court that he had been tricked by alleged friends of his to drink and then drive his car.

His sentence of one year of imprisonment was suspended and he was put on probation for one year.

Judge Boyer said, "The court has knowledge of the fact that you are a good mechanic and that your wife has recently died, leaving you with the care of a small boy, and on these grounds is lenient. You deserved a sentence as you have been before the court twice before."

FINGER-PRINTING

Citizens who never get into trouble, but who realize how easily the innocent may become involved with the police in this frenzied age, sometimes wonder if this finger printing business is not carried too far—so far in fact that it becomes a distinct and unwarranted imposition and reflection upon individuals.

The public is not particularly concerned with the cases which periodically bring this phase of police practice into notice, but everyone should be concerned in the effect of a law which may put an unconvicted and unjustly accused man into the police records with criminals, convicts and jailbirds.

In New York recently one of the city magistrates discharged a number of persons who had been convicted of minor offenses because he discovered that they were to be subjected to the indignity of being fingerprinted and "mugged." He rightly considered that such action was an unwarranted procedure, uncalled for by the nature of their offenses and their characters.

Except in the case of known criminals fingerprints and photographs for police records should be taken only after conviction and for offenses more serious than minor misdemeanors.

JOKE

More and more the question recurs: Are American institutions losing the confidence of the American people? Is it possible that they are so weak that they cannot weather criticism and free discussion? Are they so near to tottering that it is unsafe to permit a foreigner who has other ideals to expound them publicly here?

Acts and utterances of certain officials and lay citizens could be construed as answering the foregoing questions in the affirmative. But the solidity of American institutions and the confidence of the American people in the benevolence of those institutions are not to be measured by the deeds and words of a few.

"Red scares" live only in the highly imaginative and resourceful minds of issue-seeking and publicity-hungry politicians and professional orators. The public derives a dime-novel thrill out of them but never takes them seriously. Even while the red flag was being waved so vigorously at the close of the war by a handful of parlor pinks and scatter-brained agents of the department of justice, the general public, because the obvious facts did not support the manufactured stories, got no more excited than it does just before the climax of a movie thriller.

When the great body of American people have so little faith in their government and national institutions that they shudder in the presence of a few half-starved and too-lazy-to-work "radicals" and fear that the American people will pitch their own ideals and institutions overboard to embrace the plainly fallacious and impractical theories of the soap-boxers, then and then only will it be apparent that American institutions are tottering. As far as this country is concerned the communist is a huge joke rather than a menacing monster.

RAIN OR SHINE

WHAT HAS HAPPENED BEFORE
 Thanks to Manager Smiley Johnson's genius for dodging creditors, Rainey's United Shows reaches Shrewsbury. But an unpaid feed bill threatens trouble, and Smiley shoulders the responsibility because he loves Mary, owner of the circus. He is unable to raise the cash but finally persuades Amos K. Shrewsbury, who holds the bill, to accept an interest in the circus as payment. Shrewsbury is the home town of Bud Conway, a runaway college student, now with the circus. Bud also loves Mary.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

 With a sigh, Smiley launched into another long harangue on the advantages of being a partner. Presently he noticed that Amos wasn't listening, and following his gaze he saw Frankie, the couch dancer, absent-mindedly rehearsing her dance routine. As she shook her hips and wiggled her shoulders, Amos' eyes glowed with interest. Without shifting his gaze from Frankie, Amos inquired:

"If I became a partner, would I travel with the show?"

"Oh, we'd insist on that. Come ciety. Old Man Conway should be glad to have her for a daughter-in-law."

Smiley turned toward him, shocked and incredulous.

"Daughter-in-law! You're kidding."

"Wake up, Smiley. Everybody in the show knows how dippy they are over each other. That's why she wants us to make a good impression."

"Oh, yeah," muttered Smiley, bitterly.

That night the Country Club was gay with Japanese lanterns bobbing in the breeze. Mary, feeling very self-conscious and uncomfortable, sat with Bud's family. She was decidedly a failure with them. They knew nothing about circus life and were frankly shocked to learn that Mary's mother had been a contortionist. After a few feeble attempts at conversation, Mrs. Conway and her daughter excused themselves, and left Mary and Bud alone.

"They don't like me," wailed Mary on the verge of tears.

Mary—Did you really tell your folks about me?
 Bud—Sure, why they're crazy to see you. Dad's giving you a dinner to-night at the Country Club.

along, let me introduce you to the Princess de Chimay."

Smiley guided the unresisting Amos in Frankie's direction.

"Give us a flash, princess," said Smiley.

Frankie obliged with one of her best wiggles and Amos sighed in ecstasy.

"Gosh, I'd like to have that movement in my watch."

"Never mind the movement, Mr."

"Just call me A. K. I'll be a partner."

"Fine," agreed Smiley, "and now you can watch us feed the lions."

"I'm going to watch myself being fed," said Frankie, slipping her arm persuasively through Amos'. "Come on, Mr. Blueberry."

"No—Mr. Shrewsbury," corrected Amos as he allowed himself to be led away.

That evening found the circus folk greatly excited. Bud Conway has invited the bunch to a Banquet his father was giving at the country club in Mary's honor. Mary had never mingled with society people before and wasn't quite sure of herself. She confided her fears to Smiley, who wasn't very sympathetic. He couldn't see why Mary cared whether the Conways liked her and her people or not.

Bud had confided to Dalton, the ringmaster, that he hoped to get his father to put some money in the circus. This didn't fit in with Dalton's plans at all, since he and Foltz had a secret plot to take over the circus. So he made up his mind to do all he could to break up matters between Bud and Mary. Coming unexpectedly upon Smiley, he remarked:

"Our Mary's getting into high so-

"Of course, they do," comforted Bud.

In the smoking room, Dalton met Bud's father and introduced himself.

"Your son tells me he intends putting some money into the show," he began hesitatingly. "Now I hate to see him get stung, Mr. Conway. You see as a matter of fact the outfit's snowed under with bills. The Sheriff's going to attach the show tomorrow."

Mr. Conway turned with genuine sincerity, offering his hand to Dalton.

"Mr. Dalton, I want to thank you. You've saved me money and worry, and I appreciate it."

Out on the club house porch, Amos, resplendent in a dress suit turned green with age, sat with Smiley Johnson, who was equally out of place in these surroundings. Finally one of the boys offered them a sample of his pocket flash. Amos, having helped himself generously, decided he felt like a lion and Smiley promoted a roaring contest, which brought startled guests flocking out on the porch. The men appeared amused but the ladies, frankly disgusted, withdrew to the living room.

The dinner proved another miserable failure. Amos argued with the waiter who attempted to assist him to his chair. And Smiley pinched Frankie's arm with the sugar tongs, causing her to scream and upset her tea. Mary was deeply mortified.

"Has he been drinking?" Mrs. Conway inquired haughtily.

"No, Mrs. Conway, he's just clowning."

"Perhaps my sense of humor is at fault. I find it disgusting." (To be continued)

SEE WHAT NEW KONJOLA DID FOR MAN, 71

Rheumatism, Neuritis and Stomach Ailments All Banished by New and Different Medicine

MR. FIRMON J. JONES

"I am 71 years of age, and would like everyone to know what Konjola did for me," said Mr. Firmon J. Jones, Scenery Hill, Washington, Pa. "I read the statements of Washington people in the paper telling of the good results they were getting from Konjola. Off and on for twenty years I suffered with stomach trouble, rheumatism and neuritis. My stomach bloated and filled with gas after each meal and I had smothering spells. The rheumatism was mostly in my arms and shoulders, although I had awful pains all over my body at times. Last Fall a short treatment of Konjola gave me wonderful results. It removed the gas and bloating and drove every ache and pain from my body. Konjola did more good than any medicine I ever tried, and I have told many persons about this fine medicine. I cannot say enough good for it."

Konjola contains no alcohol, no nerve-deadening drugs, no heart-depressing chemicals—it is all pure medicine and every drop works. A complete treatment of from six to eight bottles is strongly recommended for best results.

Konjola is sold in Bristol at Hoffman's Cut Rate store, on any of the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—(Adv.)

IOWA XI. WEAKENED BY GRADUATION

By Curtis Hay, Jr.

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

IOWA CITY, Ia., Sept. 16.—The grinning gods of the gridiron, having shredded the University of Iowa football squad with missiles of hard luck, are chuckling at a tale of woe for the Hawkeyes as the season's opening draws near.

For Coach Burton A. Ingwersen, target for misfortune throughout six years at Iowa, must fashion his 1930 eleven largely from reserves. Nine major letter winners, including only one regular and three semi-regulars; some twenty minor letter winners, and a dozen picked men from the 1929 freshman squad are on the returning list.

The scythe of ineligibility, which has swept through all branches of Old Gold sports during the last year, has taken its toll, three men are on the injured list, and nine stellar players graduated.

Chief among the losses is that of Captain Willis A. Glassgow, all-American halfback who graduated, Carl Pignatelli, quarterback, John Fuhrman, guard, Dennis Meyers, guard; Pete Westra, star tackle; Fred Roberts, all-conference guard; Loris Hagerty, fullback; Brice Thomas, fullback; and Oakley Carlsen, end, also took their degrees.

The first of the two captains elected last fall to drop by the wayside was Mike Farroh, halfback from Michigan City, Ind., who was famed throughout the Big Ten for his powerful blocking. The Hoosier giant was found guilty of borrowing from the "belting" slush fund, a crime which also eliminated Irving Nelson, star drop kicker from Omaha, Nebraska.

Marcus Magnusson, center from Clinton and the other captain, also became ineligible recently when Ingwersen stated definitely in a letter to Director of Athletics E. H. Lauer that he would not be considered for the team. Magnusson participated in a road house free-for-all last spring and was suspended from school.

The selection of a third man for the captaincy is problematical. Ingwersen has written the remaining members of the squad asking them whether they desire to choose a new leader or have a captain appointed for each game. It is believed the latter choice will be the players' verdict.

Another tremendous loss to the team is that of Oran Pape, blond speed vender from Dubuque, Ia., who admitted playing semi-professional football. Pape, for two years Ingwersen's "ace in the hole," beat Minnesota twice with his fleetness and demonstrated that his ground gaining was as consistent as it was sensational.

Of the remaining squad, from which must be woven some sort of opposition for eight formidable opponents, the 215 pound bulk of Harold Ely, Des Moines boy, stands out as the most promising. Ely was a regular last year and is expected to play something like all-conference football at left tackle, while Wendell Benjamin, Waterloo negro, looks like a promising candidate for the other tackle berth.

A trio of mediocre ends, Gus Mastrogany, Lawrence Reedquist, and George Rogge, all major letter winners last year, are back to handle the wings. If Mastrogany can overcome a trick ankle he may be a lot better than mediocre. He injured his ankle again recently in an amateur baseball game, however, and whether or not he will be in the best of shape is a matter of conjecture.

The loss of Magnusson leaves the center post open to anybody who can show any class at all. Earl Elting, his first substitute, will be out with an injured hip sustained in an automobile accident last fall, and Ray Story, second substitute, is ineligible scholastically.

Ed Dolly, a big boy from Rock Island, Ill., starred at center for the frosh last year, but it is regarded as more probable that he will be shifted to guard because of his erratic passing. John Carlson, Clinton athlete who won a minor "I" at tackle last fall, is a possible center.

Grover Higdon, a reserve who won a major letter at guard, is returning. Thompson, Hay, Hart, Hantelman, and Samuelson, winners of minor letters last year, and Dolly, John Stutsman, and Joe Woodka, ex-frosh, are other promising prospects for guard and tackle.

In fashioning his backfield, Ingwersen will have a veteran quarterback in Leo Jensvold of Emmetsburg, semi-regular last year. Oliver Samsen, reserve fullback who showed class as a sophomore last year, will probably occupy that post unless he is beaten out by Jerry Kriz, sophomore flash from Cedar Rapids. It is possible that Kriz will be placed at halfback.

Godfrey Slavik, another 1929 freshman from Cedar Rapids, is considered a first class halfback candidate, and Jack Warrington, of Estherville was another good freshman half-back. John Miller, a small but flashy ball carrier, and Leo's twin brother, Lloyd Jensvold, are other first rank halfback prospects.

To the tale of woe must be added the ruptured appendix of Orville Tousey, a rangy halfback and good blocker, who was counted on to take Farroh's place. Tousey's back was severely injured in practice last year and he has not yet fully recovered from the injury.

Doylestown Fair Ready to Open

gion drum and bugle corps will compete in the contest on Wednesday night of fair week. The contest will be on the race track at 8 o'clock promptly when the corps will maneuver and be judged. Corps from Trenton, Norristown, Lansdale, Philadelphia, Morrisville, Bristol and other cities are entered.

Workmen will start this week on the installation of a complete amplifying system. This will make it possible to hear from any section of the fair grounds, what is going on in front of the big grandstand. Commercial advertising over the amplifier this year will be banned. The system will be used exclusively for promoting the interest of the fair and the various exhibits and shows on the ground.

Over a thousand entries have been entered in the hobby show sponsored by the Boy Scouts of Bucks county. The Scouts this year are making a collection by truck throughout the county of exhibits from the various Scouts.

Free acts galore have been hired for all of fair week. There will be plenty of stunts in front of the grandstand every afternoon and night.

The cattle show as well as every other department in the fair this year is up to par, department heads report.

German Democracy Wars With Socialist Adherents

neutral observers that the democracy of Germany, as that of other Central European countries, is in trouble mainly because these countries chose the British form of parliamentary government rather than the American form of three independent departments of government—the executive, the legislative and the judiciary.

Under the impact of a revolution following defeat, the disillusioned masses demanded absolute authority and without training or experience jumped from virtual autocracy to the extremist form of democracy.

Parliamentary government is beginning to jam even in England because of the arrival of a third party.

In Central Europe, it paralyzed government entirely.

There were no great parties with platforms broad enough to capture a majority of the population. Instead, there was a bushful of parties, each claiming a special "Weltanschauung" of its own, but actually representing some special economic, social, cultural or territorial interest. Proportional representation multiplied the number of parties so that more than thirty are trying to get representation in the next Reichstag.

What Central Europe needed most after the war was a strong executive to master the many problems of readjustment. What happened was that the cabinet, that is the executive department, was made the creature of accidental majorities formed by suitably toppling over in situations where a poor government was still better than no government at all. Germany has had 17 different cabinets during the last 12 years.

The result was that most of the important measures which brought comparative stability and recovery to Central Europe had to be imposed by dictatorial means. The famous emergency Paragraph Forty-eight of the German constitution, under which Hindenburg rules now, was used even more frequently by the Socialist President

Friedrich Ebert, and the Socialist Premier of Prussia, Otto Braun, used by the analogous paragraph of the Prussian constitution as frequently.

Some Central European countries have therefore adopted the dictatorship as a more or less permanent institution.

The dissatisfaction with the present parliamentary government is general, but on the remedies the parties are as much apart as on everything else.

One movement in Germany would give "more power to the president."

as the first step toward a dictatorship.

The Brüning cabinet has promised to initiate a reform of the election system, in order to make the deputies more directly responsible to the voters. Powerful industrial interests, however, are against a radical change because they fear that election by simple majorities might produce an absolute Socialist majority in the Reichstag.

It may yet take a democratic dictator to put democracy on its feet in Central Europe.

ed the story circulating among the fans of other cities.

For years Muggsy McGraw has been one of the most eccentric figures of the National Game. His fist fights on and off the diamond and his employment of unique means of strategy to win ball games have made him a singular figure among the scores of team leaders who have come and passed since he first strode out upon the field at the New York Polo Grounds—a strapping manager.

John McGraw first attracted attention as a third baseman with the old Baltimore Orioles. He still insists that the Orioles was the greatest aggregation of ball-tossers ever seen in action.

In the early part of the century, two thousand dollars a year was considered a good salary for big stars. There are few, if any, recruits in the big leagues today who get less than that.

Pays for the Best

John McGraw was the first manager to use important money as a factor in winning ball games. When he paid the then record price of $11,000 for Rube Marquard, other managers and ball magnates said he was crazy—no pitcher—particularly a left-hander, was worth that much to any team.

McGraw has had under his management some of the best players of all time. Amos Rusie, Christy Mathewson, Rogers Hornsby, Joe McGinity and Larry Doyle and many other satellites of the first magnitude took orders from "Muggsy" at one time or other in their brilliant careers.

Demands Obedience

In his direction of his team, McGraw follows one cardinal principal. Every player has to be a good soldier, and do exactly as McGraw tells him. If he doesn't, the rebel soon finds himself on the roster of some other club.

McGraw has never been known as a developer of great ball players. That distinction falls to Connie Mack, the oldest veteran of the rival American League.

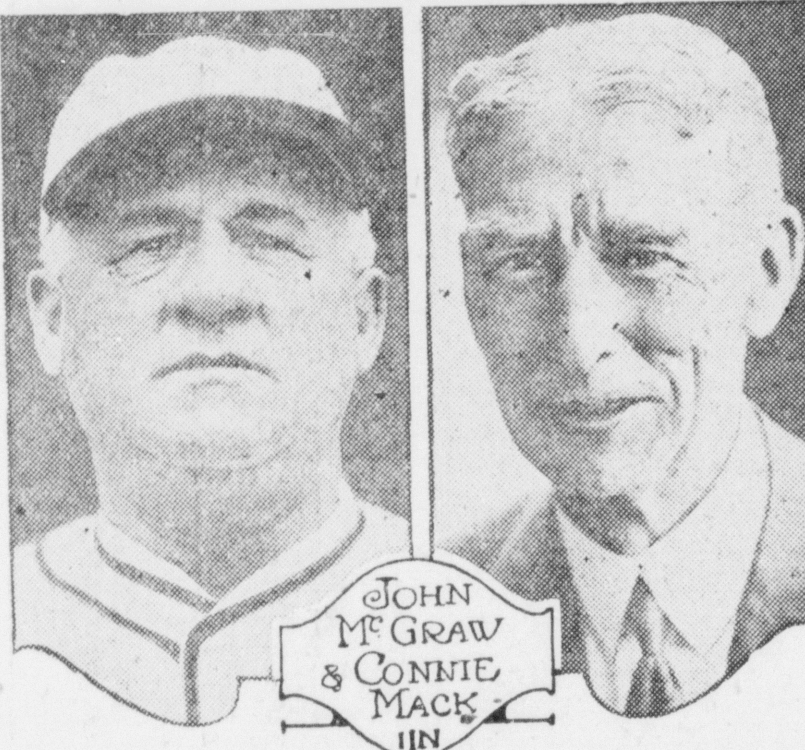

About fifteen years ago Mack, whose real name is McGillicuddy, deliberately broke up the greatest team of modern-times. With its famous $100,000 infield—Stuffy McInnis, Eddie Collins, Jack Barry and Frank (Home Run) Baker—had won four pennants in succession and annexed three world championships.

Philadelphia tired of its unmatchable skill. The Quaker City fans would not flock to the Athletics' ball park in sufficient numbers to pay the team a satisfactory profit.

Mack sold most of his stars and started to slowly build up another great team from raw recruits. It took years but the Athletics finally came through and Mack found himself again directing the destinies of a team in the world's series.

Napoleon of Diamond Continues to Lead Giants

John J. McGraw, of Giants, Highest Paid Baseball Manager in the World, Shares Honors in Service with Connie Mack.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—John McGraw, the most famous and successful of all big league baseball managers, has just signed a five-year contract to manage the New York Giants at $75,000 annually—the same sum a man named Herbert Hoover receives for acting as President of the United States.

With Connie Mack of the Philadelphia Athletics, McGraw has outlasted all rival managers and players. Mack has been managing the Quaker City outfit since 1901. McGraw took the helm of the famous Gotham team 25 years ago.

Under McGraw, the Giants have captured ten pennants and three world championships. Mack's Athletics have won six pennants and four world championships. Between them, Mack and McGraw have dominated the two big leagues.

When he signed for the 'nth time with the New York Nationals, McGraw's old contract had not yet expired. Dame Rumor, however, had been busily spreading the report that the Little Napoleon was through and was to be supplanted next year by Dave Bancroft.

The illustrious "Muggsy" had not been traveling with his team this last few weeks because of illness. His absence from the scenes of action start-

Official Laxity Blamed for Racketeering Increase in New York

City Survey Shows Decrease in Criminal Convictions as Arsenals Are Discovered and Gangster Activities Become More Prevalent.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Has New York become the racketeers' paradise?

Current issues of newspapers indicate that the underworld is gaining the upper hand in the richest city of the world. Stories of graft in city bureaus and on the bench share front pages with tales of reckless gangster killings and of arsenals maintained by various criminal "mobs."

Not the least portentous of these journalistic reports on the ever-growing industry of racketeering is the story that Jack ("Legs") Diamond and Al ("Scarface") Capone are lining up their forces for a final fight for control of New York's underworld. Wheels of Justice Clog

According to official records, the wheels of justice are clogged up before they even start revolving. In the six months from January last to June inclusive, there have been 164 murders compared with 138 during the same six months of 1929. Of the criminals apprehended only one has been sentenced to the electric chair.

The figures demonstrate that only one murderer in sixteen is convicted of anything at all. The chances are three and a half to one that the killer will not even be indicted.

When the late Commissioner Joseph E. Warren, resigned over a year and a half ago, Mayor Walker filled the vacancy by appointing Grover Whalen. Commissioner Whalen started things off with a bang, announcing that he would turn up the murderer of Arnold Rothstein, famous gambler, before many days had passed.

There would be very little "putting on the spot" killings while he was boss of the police, he added in no uncertain tones. The underworld answered him very shortly with a double murder in a nocturnal resort known as the "Hotsy-Totsy Club."

The New Regime

Commissioner Whalen was perturbed, to say the least, but he promptly announced he knew who the gunmen were and would have them behind jail bars before very long.

Later George McManus, in whose hotel room Rothstein was said to have been killed, was arrested, indicted and cleared after a trial that was featured by refusals of State witnesses to testify against the defendant.

Of the Hotsy-Totsy gorillas, nothing has been heard or seen. The underworld had won its first skirmish with Commissioner Whalen.

A few months ago, Mayor Walker supplanted Whalen with Ed. Mulrooney, a square chin old-fashioned cop who doesn't talk as much as his predecessor but knows the crooks and racketeers of New York by name, their working methods and underworld associations. According to Headquarters, no tougher or more honest or more hard-working policeman ever lived.

But Mulrooney hasn't yet been able to do much about the city crime situation. The crooks have a long head start on him.

Up-To-Date Arsenal

There is the story, for instance, about the astonishing arsenal found in an outlying district of Brooklyn. Al Capone, unsatisfied with his racket monopoly of various rackets in Chicago, was mapping out a campaign to make a similar conquest of New York.

That meant an underworld war between Capone and the almost equally famous Jack ("Legs") Diamond. Detectives were assigned to trail all of Diamond's men.

Following one of his cars driven by James Dalton, his chauffeur, the police discovered machine guns, tear gas bombs, hand grenades and bullet proof vests in a tenement.

Put On The Spot

Two days later Harry Western, an up-State roadhouse owner and alleged by the police to have squealed on rum-runners, disappeared. The police sought in vain for Diamond, to whose Summer home Western is alleged to have been summoned by the man who is called the boss of New York's underworld.

If Western has been killed, as police are inclined to believe, his death will probably prove as mystifying to the police as the Rothstein and Hotsy-Totsy killings.

Though possibly mystifying is not the word. Any Headquarters dick could tell you, if he chose, who bumped off the king of gamblers and the victims in the night club shooting.

But he'd also tell you that he could get no witnesses to testify against the murderers. All fear the code of the underworld—to speak is to court being "put on the spot."

New York mightn't be exactly a paradise for the racketeers—but it certainly is something very much life to it.
